

Police did not like that idea and started assaulting the students, punching them, hitting them with the gun butts, before firing shots at them," Anjo said.

"The students were running for cover in all directions, but I saw some people badly wounded," he said.

There was no immediate comment from police in Port Moresby.

Video on social media showed students fleeing amid clouds of tear gas and the sound of gunfire. Pictures showed several men with what appeared to be serious stomach, chest and leg wounds.

Thousands of students across PNG have been protesting and boycotting classes for weeks amid growing political unrest.

O'Neill, who came to power in 2011 promising to reign in corruption, has faced allegations he authorized millions of dollars in fraudulent payments to a leading law firm.

Far-right FPO challenges election result

AUSTRIA: Austria's far-right Freedom Party (FPO) on Wednesday formally contested the result of last month's presidential election, calling into question the count of postal ballots that swung the vote against its candidate.

Postal ballots pushed former Greens leader Alexander Van der Bellen past the FPO's Norbert Hofer in a tight run-off vote in which the margin of victory was less than 1 percentage point, or roughly 31,000 votes.

While the post of president is largely ceremonial in Austria, Hofer would have been the first far-right head of state in the European Union. Governments across the continent breathed a sigh of relief at his defeat.

FPO leader Heinz-Christian Strache called for a re-run of the election, saying his party had evidence of numerous irregularities, including the early counting of postal ballots — an issue many see as a technicality, not a serious breach. — Reuters
